It was leadership as it was meant to be. The head was held high. The mind was without fear.

It was the quintessential Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman greeting the crowd, in his baritone, with the Joi Bangla salutation. Seconds later, he was informing the world's media, all packed in that hall at Claridge's, "As you can see, gentlemen, I am alive and well." And then came that poetic opening to his statement: "Today, I am free to share the unbounded joy of freedom with my fellow countrymen, who have won their freedom in an epic liberation struggle."

There was that unmistakable epic quality in him. Nearly ten months of imprisonment had not dimmed his commitment to his politics. The resolve was obvious. The voice was firm. The future glowed in the eyes. The sense of triumph, of his people under his guidance, was palpable. He was informing the world that Bangladesh had arrived, that he was there to take charge of its future as he had been at the helm of its recent past.
